

THE ANT

You can't help the life you were given, like the ant can't help hers, the one crawling the white wall at work, in the bathroom, where my hands, tied to the clock, can't help, and where there are no windows.
I shut the door behind me, think, how will she survive?
Through the smallest crevice somewhere, I know she will.